start with a conceptual, non 43-101 open pit resource of 1.92 million ounces identified within the Cliff Creek Target alone when applying a 0.5 g/t cutoff.

The contour map displayed on your right (previous page) shows the location of the potential Cliff Creek open-pit mine. But also note other targets like AGB, Dukes Ridge, and Phoenix—each of which, a recent technical report stated, have similar resource potential.

I believe this summer's fully funded drill program will start to bring the company up toward its 5- million-gold-equivalent-ounce target level. A 43-101 resource calculation by the end of this year or early in 2021 followed by a Preliminary Economic Assessment (PEA) should start to catch the market's attention, although if you wait until then it's likely a major portion of the upside may be gone. Investors should enjoy a steady flow of drill results from about August 2020 through January 2021. As Jim Greig, the president of Benchmark, told me in my interview with him on June 9, <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=RugerYNBv0s>, the company is at the point now when they are starting to get some serious attention from institutional investors. It is clear to me that this management team is thinking in terms of moving this brownfield project, which enjoys good infrastructure, toward production depending on drill results and a PEA next year. Earlier this year the company raised C$24 million so it is well funded to carry out the work required to move this story onto the radar screens of major institutions. In addition to my interview with Jim Greig, Bob Moriarty wrote this short and to-the-point report: <http://www.321gold.com/editorials/moriarty/moriarty061820.html>.
